Medical malpractice/negligence case that causes a brain and spinal cord injury due to negligence of multiple sclerosis

Hello Jeffrey Phillips,

I have a medical negligence case against Dr. Jonathan Carter in the mistreatment of a neurological condition called multiple sclerosis (MS).

The ignorance of the clear features of MS in the MRIs and withholding the prescription for the medications for MS (which the doctor lies about in his report) by the clinician causes further damage to both the brain and the spinal column with months of this appointment.

The further damage to the brain and spinal column in medicine is regarded as "secondary progressive" MS but its due to medical negligence in my case (it was a preventable neurological injury)

Dr. Carters report and the report a treating physician is included for comparison.

Thanks,
Narendra Jana
